

This Reno Pro Designed Her Dream Kitchen in Two Months

By Kelsey Clark

Architect and designer Taryn Bone is no novice.

Published: August 2, 2020

Architecture and Design: Bone Collective Studio

Photography: Joyelle West

Taryn Bone

BONE COLLECTIVE STUDIO

Bone's home used to be a corner store—and her kitchen was once L-shaped. She opened it into a U-shape to maximize the space.

KC:

I can imagine! Were there any other unexpected surprises or challenges?

TB:

Well, the appliances didn't get delivered until February, so we were living in this home without a dishwasher or fridge for a few weeks. I love entertaining and I cook almost every meal, so that was unfortunate.

TB:

I really just wanted to create a space where my guests could gather. Although we've only had a few people over here and there due to the pandemic, people are drawn to this room, which I love. The entire home is really open, and the kitchen adjoins a floating dining table, which is an ideal setup.

Bone chose Semihandmade's Impression Tahoe cabinetry for her kitchen, and paired it with quartz countertops.

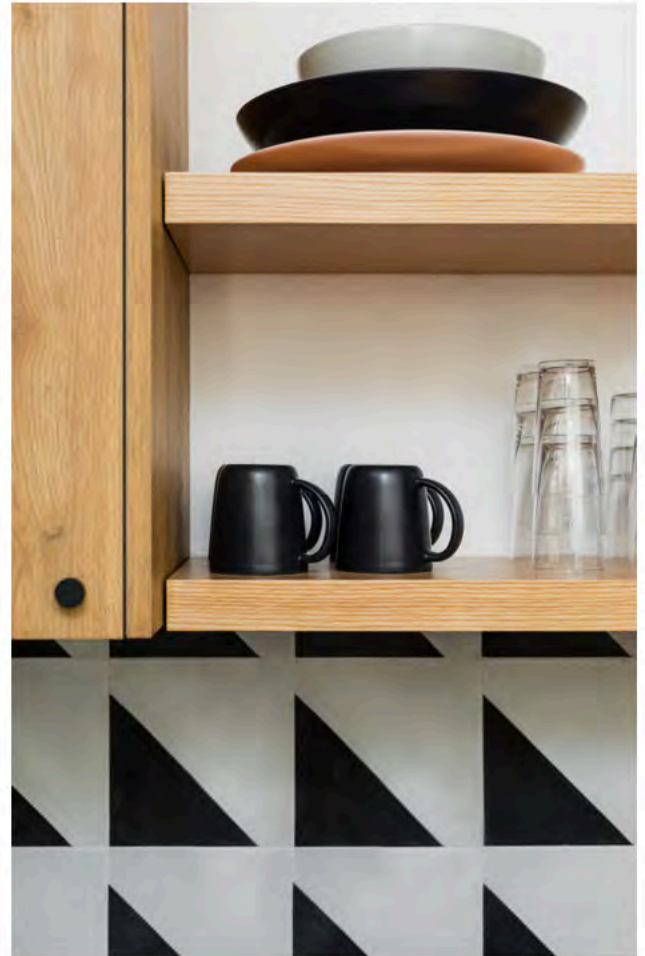

She also chose Semihandmade's oak floating shelves, which she uses to display dishware and ingredients.

TB:

I can actually see the kitchen from my office, and I love being able to look at that playful pattern. I aim to design with mental health and well-being in mind, and it's almost like a piece of art that I can look at when I need a respite from work. It just makes me happy!

Bone asked her carpenter to build a custom hood, which she painted black.

She created an eye-catching backsplash using the "A Little Off Corner" tile from her collection with Granada Tile.